The Robert W. Teater Conservation Education Camp at the Wilds is an excellent place to spend one or more nights while learning about conservation and the environment. This modern facility is composed of eight structures. There are four sleeping yurts, a staff yurt, a dining yurt complex, an air-conditioned activity yurt, and a shower house facility. The shower house is a brick building that contains 3 showers and 3 restroom stalls for each gender. There is hot and cold potable water available for use at the camp, as well as a fire ring stocked with firewood.

Each of the four sleeping yurts accommodates 12 guests in 6 bunk beds. The sleeping capacity of the entire camp is 48 people. Each yurt has one electrical outlet and overhead lighting. The yurt’s are climate controlled and are equipped with screened windows that have flaps that open and close.

The dining yurt seats 52 guests and provides a central meeting point for those staying at the camp. Day or night, the large deck is an exceptional outdoor eating or meeting area, and is lit by three spotlights. Meals are catered onsite by the Overlook Café.
